The Department for Work and Pensions said the net cost of the welfare system had increased by £1.5bn over the past year. The number of claimants has increased by 900,000. A previous report from the DWP estimated there were about 1.7 million more people on benefits than the number it estimated would be out of work. 'Real problems' Communities Secretary Eric Pickles said the growth in the number of claimants was a "direct result of the Labour government's failure to reform public services and cut the cost of the welfare state". "These real problems are only getting worse as the bill for these services increases year on year, leaving communities up and down the country facing real problems." The latest figures, published by the Department for Work and Pensions, show the number of new claims have grown by more than a third since Labour came to power in 1997, to almost 4.4 million. In 1997, there were about 3.9 million people claiming benefits compared to the current figure of about 7.3 million. The number of people claiming incapacity benefits has risen by more than a third since 1997, from 1.3 million to 1.8 million. The Department for Work and Pensions also reported that the number of people receiving disability living allowance (DLA) has risen by more than 12,000 since 2010. The DWP said it was critical the government provided income support to those who need it. "The DWP has protected real income for the poorest and ensured people who need it don't struggle to get it. But the government also needs to reduce welfare spending at this time
