Sirolimus is the most potent mammalian target of rapamycin (mTOR) inhibitor in view of the future clinical use. However, the outcome of sirolimus therapy in kidney transplantation is not ideal. The incidence of biopsy-proven acute rejection (BPAR) is high even at the present time. Mycophenolate mofetil (MMF), a potent inhibitor of B and T cell function, has been the standard maintenance immunosuppression for decades. The combination of sirolimus and MMF was proven in three randomized trials (ARTIS, DRI

Study, and BENEFIT) to be superior to MMF monotherapy. Furthermore, a recent study found the combination of sirolimus and MMF to be superior to the combination of calcineurin inhibitor (CNI) and MMF. For these reasons, sirolimus plus MMF is expected to be the standard treatment for kidney transplantation in the near future. However, side effects, such as stomatitis, dyslipidemia, and metabolic disturbances, do limit the clinical application of sirolimus. MMF induces more side effects than CNI. Combination therapy with sirolimus and MMF may be inappropriate. with the way things are going. In my younger days I would be thrilled if my mom could take me out to dinner at a nice restaurant. In my youth we actually would go to the movies or out to dinner but now I am thirty years old and still can't afford to go out to eat more than once a month. My husband works and struggles to earn enough to pay our bills. We are trying to save and get out of debt. We have to be very careful with our spending and know that while we want the best for our kids we cannot provide them with the b7e8fdf5c8
