PC >>> PS3>>> XBOX 360>>> - KONAMI COMPUTER ENTERTAINMENTQ: SQLite on Android accessing same Database from two classes I have an app that has 2 database classes. Both access the same database, and both create new tables. The first table has only one column, an ID. The second table has an ID and 2 columns, NAME, ANOTHER_NAME. I used db.open() in both DBHelper classes, and the same db file (which is created by File class with db.create()). The problem is when I want to create the second table with the NAME column filled up, it seems it will fail in this class, but not in the other class. A: You should use private static SQLiteDatabase database; in your DBHelper classes. You can then always refer to the same instance of the database. Note, however, that this is only a singleton! Do not do "new SQLiteDatabase()" because that will just create a new database for each new instance of the DBHelper! Q: Failed to capture JWT token for users who have access to a web application I have a spring boot application that authenticates users based on a JWT. I'm using Keycloak for authentication and authorization (which I have successfully configured). I have a privileged role for the web application and all I am doing is providing the service to set up the JWT on Spring Security which looks like this: @Override protected void configure(HttpSecurity http) throws Exception { http.csrf().disable(); http.csrf().disable(); http.authorizeRequests() .antMatchers("/acme/my-web-application-start-point") .permitAll() .antMatchers("/acme/my-web-application bff6bb2d33

Q: Help-finding $k \in \mathbb{Z}$ such that $x^k \equiv 1 \pmod{p}$ I'm working on an exercise for my number theory course, and part of it asks to find $k \in \mathbb{Z}$ such that $x^k \equiv 1 \pmod{p}$, where x is an integer and p is a prime. I've tried to approach this problem by multiplying the congruence equation by x^i (or even by x^n for some n), but it seems to never be able to become an integer at all. I've also considered showing that $x^k \equiv 1 \pmod{p}$ implies that $x \equiv 1 \pmod{p}$, but that approach doesn't seem to work either. A: I assume that you are trying to find all the k such that $x^k \equiv 1 \bmod p$. Since $x \equiv 0 \bmod p$ implies $x^k \equiv 0 \bmod p$, it should be enough to check k values between 1 and $p - 1$. Specifically, you need to check $$ k = \begin{cases} 1 \text{ and } 0, & p \equiv 1 \\ p - 1 \text{ and } 1, & p \equiv -1. \end{cases} $$ This works because $p \equiv -1 \bmod p$ only holds if $p = 2$, and then the only solution is 0. Illumination schemes for the display of fingerprints on a transparent surface. The optical scattering properties of the human fingerprint are investigated. The fingerprint contains chirped scattering elements whose ensembles act as diffusers. Hence, in the fingerprint, light undergoes randomization rather than focusing. For a given finger, the fingerprint image is obtained as a result of the backscattering of light from the fingerprint. The images are investigated as functions of wavelength and angle of incidence, respectively. A constant backscattering cone angle of 23.5degrees is found for a wavelength of 780nm, which leads to a desirable sensitivity of the fingerprint image. The investigated illumination scheme for fingerprint displays is based on an array
