The Marx Brothers were one of the most high-profile comedians of the twentieth century. Groucho (1881-1977), Chico (1886-1980) and Harpo (1886-1965) were the three Marx brothers who formed the famous "Hebrew-American joke team." Born to Russian-Jewish immigrants in New York City, they were the sons of Polish-Jewish father, Allie, a would-be painter and the daughter of a traveling Ghetto-blaster, and a Hungarian immigrant mother, Gracie, who was a clog dancer. The family lived in a tenement on New York's Lower East Side, and the brothers were all at New York High School of Music & Art at the same time, before Groucho graduated in 1903. While still in high school, Groucho met Harpo, and the two formed a comedy team. In 1905 they joined their brother Chico to form the original "Three Marx Brothers," and made their first stage appearance in 1906. They were eventually hired as vaudeville acts and tried out for the first time before The Great White Way at the Orpheum Theatre in early 1912. They all debuted on Broadway in the musical revue "Animal Crackers." On the way to becoming a first-rate comedy trio, they met a number of outstanding comic personalities, including the already established Stan Laurel (1890-1965), and the very young Bud Abbott (1908-1987). Abbott was responsible for the best part of the brothers' early success; their act which relied mainly on physical comedy, had an acrobatic zest which was much appreciated by audiences. Together, the brothers made dozens of movies, primarily for Paramount, as well as with Warner Brothers, Columbia and others, over a period of eighteen years. Most of their original movies (still available on DVD) are comedies, but in recent years the Three Marx Brothers, like the many other comedy teams, have also found great success on television, with a series of prime time situation comedies, which brought along a host of new audience-friendly comedians like Carol Burnett, Carroll O'Connor, and Eddie Murphy, as well as the sitcoms "Seinfeld" and "Frasier." Throughout the twentieth century, as comedy declined, the Marx Brothers remained popular, with Groucho becoming the most popular of the three. In 1946, he had his own television show, "Your Show of Shows," which was replaced by "Your Little Show of

Based on my understanding of TWBY, the most powerful weapon in the show/story is "evil". Yes, "evil" is a metaphor for a kind of internal thought that affects individuals, but "evil" itself is a concrete and tangible entity. In TWBY we refer to this "evil" as "the darkness" or "the Void", and the most powerful weapon against it is also concrete and tangible. Meanwhile, Kyoya looks to TWBY for guidance in situations where he faces the "evil", and he does so based on his own personal experiences with it. The most powerful weapon against "evil" is an experience of "goodness", which he derives from his own experiences with "goodness". The next most powerful weapon against "evil" is the memories of his friends and allies. This shows that the most powerful weapon against "evil" is not the most powerful weapon after all - Kyoya himself is the most powerful weapon. This brings me to my question: Is it illegal to hand out (or sell for money) more powerful weapons to individuals in a nonviolent capacity? A: TL;DR: The story specifically implies that Kyoya (and potentially other characters) are repeatedly using "evil" to deal with other characters, such as by becoming possessed and taking out their Evil Waifus (via Dream Foucault). It's never given any official word that says Kyoya shouldn't use his powers this way, though it's hard to imagine the seemingly moral and altruistic Kyoya wouldn't want to. Considering that he feels the need to train his Nanoha to fight other people, it's not really plausible that he'd want to ban them from doing anything he himself is comfortable with. So, if you consider all the above
